

Esmé Blore-Rimmer

In loving memory of our precious girl.

Esmé Blore-Rimmer was 17 years of age, she had attended the Reading Festival and had been camping with friends they had seen some of her favourite bands play over the August 2013 Bank Holiday weekend. She was previously fit and well with no significant past medical history. Contrary to hurtful press speculation she had not taken illicit drugs at the festival. Esmé simply became unwell with a bout of vomiting and returned home a day earlier than planned from the trip. Esmé continued to vomit throughout the night and was admitted to A & E the following day. Her condition remained stable until she suffered a sudden cardiac arrest early evening, sadly prolonged resuscitation was not successful and she lost her fight to survive on Monday 26th August 2013.

Esmé was a beautiful, vibrant, and spirited girl; she had a true zest for enjoying life to the full. She had a cracking sense of humour and a very kind spirit that brought joy to many. She had grown into a confident young woman who was very clear that her next educational step would be to study Fashion Communication and Styling preferably at Middlesex University. Esmé was never afraid to voice her opinion, despite her young age she had a strong work ethic and she graced us all with her infectious smile and laugh. Esmé is deeply missed by many of the hearts she touched.

Following a serious investigation into her sudden and unexplained death by the hospital her family were eventually notified that Esmé had undiagnosed MCADD a condition we had never heard of.

Early in January this year Esmé's brother Dominic (aged 13) was tested and found to have the same condition, obviously this was another devastating blow for us, but we have been reassured that providing the condition is diagnosed and dietary recommendations are kept to this should be relatively straight forward to manage.

Bittersweet information following the loss of Esmé.

We would like to support Climb and raise awareness of MCADD and other metabolic diseases and remember Esmé via the Galaxy Tribute Fund.

Heartache no one can heal, memories no one can steal.
